Douglas Eckhoff rose from his chair, carefully pacing through the atrium of the Minneapolis Veterans Affairs Hospital to the front of the facility’s Auditorium.

Last August, the walk seemed impossible, but thanks to Ekso Bionics’ Ekso GT suit, the impossible is becoming more possible with each passing day.

Eckhoff was on hand May 18 to showcase the benefits of the suit as the Fraternal Order of Eagles and Soldier Strong formally donated a new $150,000 unit to the VA Hospital to assist with veterans’ rehabilitation efforts.

After shattering his T12 vertebra in a motorcycle accident last summer, Eckhoff, a Minnesota native and veteran, began rehabbing at the Minneapolis VA using a first-generation Ekso GT model. In the time since, he’s regained the ability to walk independently with the use of a cane and custom orthotics.

“(When I first started), I took, like, 10 steps and they could tell just by the way I walked – from the way I started until after the machine – it was just incredible,” Eckhoff said. “Everything was in line, everything was level, everything was moving smooth. I only went like 10 steps and then I started falling apart. But just to be able to know that I could do it again is just huge...you can’t imagine what the feeling is.”

The Ekso GT is easily tailored to fit the rehabilitation level of the patient, allowing therapists to have the suit provide full support for those in the initial stages of recovery, or little more than simple stability for more advanced patients. The adjustable nature of the device makes it easier for patients to continue their progressive recovery.

“(The suit) makes our job a whole lot easier,” physical therapist Crystal Stein said. “Before the Ekso, we would have them on a treadmill suspended and we would be moving each of their legs forward every step they take and that can take a toll on your body. This is moving the limbs in the exact pattern you want and training them how to do that without us having to lift. We’re guarding and providing them with stability but the machine is doing a lot of the training and fine tuning. It helps us tremendously.”

Stein also said it’s important for patients to have access to the device as quickly as possible. The longer the various systems of the body are subject to immobility, the more difficult it becomes to make those systems active again and retrain them to walk.

Both Stein and Eckhoff noted the mental benefits of the suit. For Eckhoff, the initial attempt to walk again was scary, but as therapy progressed, the feeling of walking by himself continued to push him toward greater successes.

“It’s very much an interaction between therapist and veteran to find that balance of how much do I let him do what he needs to accomplish versus how much do I do and then they start to build confidence in their abilities,” Stein said.

The F.O.E. and Soldier Strong each donated $75,000 toward the purchase of the new device for the Minneapolis VA hospital, which is recognized as one of five elite VA hospitals in the country. The new device provides the hospital with the most up-to-date Ekso GT assistance and will enable them to help even more patients as they continue to use the original model for therapeutic purposes.

The Eagles and Soldier Strong formally partnered with Ekso Bionics during the 2015 F.O.E. International Convention in Milwaukee, Wisc. The ongoing project will continue to raise funds with the help of the Eagles’ more than 700,000 members across the United States and Canada to provide a device to VA hospitals in need. The unit donated to the Minneapolis VA was the first donated with the help of the Eagles.

As for Eckhoff, he continues to progress at a solid pace and can drive thanks to the use of custom adaptations made to his vehicle. He hopes to one day ride his motorcycle again.

“Only god knows (my prognosis),” Eckhoff said. “I ask my doctor’s all the time and they say nobody knows. If the nerves come back, if the muscles come back, who knows. But every week I get better. Every week I walk farther. It’s amazing what happens here.”
