Whistler's famous painting of his mother was the inspiration for this bronze sculpture in Ashland, Pa., a tribute to all mothers everywhere.

FOR MOTHERS EVERYWHERE

A Mother's Memorial that may be the only one of its kind sits atop a small hill in the Schuylkill County community of Ashland, Pa.

With Mother's Day near, the words inscribed in granite on its base are fitting: "It honors all mothers, past and present, and is the only one of its kind in the nation," and the additional inscription, "A mother is the holiest thing alive," taken from Samuel Taylor Coleridge's poem, The Mother.

Now weathered by the elements to greenish hue, the memorial is a bronze sculpture reproducing the figure in the painting that James McNeill Whistler originally called Arrangement in Grey and Black Number I but is far more famous as "Whistler's Mother." Dedicated in 1938, the memorial at Ashland first was proposed as an honor to the mothers of the community the year before at the Ashland Boys Association celebration.

The unique memorial is a credit to the association, which holds an annual homecoming and parade and has a staff that keeps in contact with the thousands of native sons who have left Ashland but return for the annual celebration.

Members of the association and the Ashland Women's Club raised the $6,000 to build the memorial. Each person who contributed $1 or more received a bronze coin struck in the likeness of the proposed memorial.

At the dedication ceremony in 1938, the 1,600-pound statue, which rests on a three-ton granite base, was unveiled by the community's two oldest mothers, who were 88 and 91.

The designers were Emil Siebern and Julius C. Loester, both of New York. The latter designed and built many war memorials in New Jersey and New York and is noted for his "Doughboy" memorials. While "Whistler's Mother" hangs in the Louvre in Paris, Ashland's bronze counterpart of the painting has its own significance each Mother's Day.

In an effort to provide a diverse offering of news items for our members each month, the largest and/or most unique donation from each State/Province we receive news from will be featured in our People Helping People section. Once each State/Province we have news from has been represented, we will begin to allow additional items.

value as a service organization with members of varying skill sets.”

Fawcett, 53, has been involved with the F.O.E. for more than two decades and currently serves as owner of The Fawcett Group, which provides social media marketing assistance for small businesses. As a peer of many of his clients as well as many Eagles brothers and sisters, he sees first-hand the effects of how advanced technology can hamper older generations.

“The people who come to me are usually my age,” Fawcett said.
“They know they need to build a presence to survive but they’re not sure how to do it and as a small business owner, they aren’t afforded the time to learn by themselves and still keep their business alive.”

According to Fawcett, it is an issue readily apparent within the F.O.E. as well. Fawcett has used his expertise to build and maintain a website for his Aerie and works with members to express the importance of taking advantage of new communication avenues to build a more efficient organization.

“There’s a built-in disconnect when it comes to people my age and the younger generations they’re trying to reach,” he said. “I try to help bridge that gap and provide an understanding using Facebook as the hub. A lot of times there can be skepticism when it comes to younger people prefer to communicate but my age makes me more accessible to them. It’s easier to establish a level of comfort when the information comes from someone like you.”

Each workshop lasts 3-4 hours depending on the number of participants and their level of expertise with the $97 participation fee donated back to the Eagles. A limit of 10 participants is in place to ensure each individual receives adequate one-on-one time.

“Providing a personal experience is key,” Fawcett said. “I want to offer step-by-step instruction regarding how this works and what they have to gain from it. The positives of using social media are enormous and I make sure those who attend understand that Facebook really is a tremendously useful tool.”

Fawcett plans to hold workshops quarterly at the Folsom Eagles and is open to instructing citizens in other F.O.E. communities to help raise money for charity and provide insight into modern communication avenues.

“Getting donations is tough right now,” he said. “We gave to figure out new ways to provide value to the community and excite people about coming in to participate. Once we get people in for the workshop, we have the ability to introduce them to The Fraternal Order of Eagles and once we introduce them, I’m confident they’ll want to be a part of our history.”

Dr. E. Dale Abel To Lead Diabetes Research Center

The Fraternal Order of Eagles Diabetes Research Center has appointed E. Dale Abel, M.D., D.Phil, as the new director of the center located on the University of Iowa main campus. Dr. Abel will hold the John B. Stokes III Chair and will begin serving in his role as director June 30.

Dr. Abel is currently the chief of the Endocrinology, Metabolism and Diabetes division at the University of Utah School of Medicine, where he has been on faculty as a professor of medicine and biochemistry since 2000.

Dr. Abel received his medical degree with distinction from the University of the West Indies, and attended Oxford University as a Rhodes Scholar where he earned his Doctor of Philosophy degree.
He completed his medical training at Northwestern University, where he served as chief medical resident before moving on to Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center at the Harvard Medical School.

“Diabetes affects more than 26 million people. Finding a cure means we must populate our world-class facilities with the best research talent in the US and the world.” says Deb Schwinn, dean of the UI Carver College of Medicine. “I am very impressed by Dr.
Abel’s background and experience and know he is the perfect fit to lead our diabetes research center.”

The partnership between the Eagles and Iowa is already fostering new discoveries that may one day lead to new treatments and maybe even prevention of diabetes. The announcement of Dr. Abel’s leadership is an important milestone in the continued substantial growth for one of the world’s preeminent research centers.
